

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THE portion of the Dictionary occupied with the letter E contains 9,249 Main words, 1,813 Subordinate words, 923 Special combinations, and 756 Obvious combinations: total 12,741. Of the 9,249 Main words, 2,409, or 26 per cent., are marked as obsolete, and 319, or 3\frac{1}{2} per cent., as alien or imperfectly naturalized.

The section of the English vocabulary included in the present half-volume is remarkable for the extremely small proportion of native English words which it contains, as compared with the large number of words adopted from French (many of which are obsolete), and of derivatives from Greek and Latin. A feature of the words beginning with E that will at once attract attention is the unusual abundance of technical terms belonging to modern science. It has often been difficult to determine whether particular words of this class should be inserted or not; and probably no two critics would entirely agree in their lists of deficiencies or redundancies in this respect. While care has been taken to ensure the utmost possible accuracy in the explanation of the scientific terms given, it must be remembered that the concern of an English Dictionary is with their origin and history as words, not with the minute description of the things which they represent. So far as possible, modern words of this kind have been traced back to the authors by whom they were formed, and the inventor's own statements as to the etymology and the reason for which the name was given have, when it seemed necessary, been quoted.

Among the articles in which the current etymological statements are corrected or supplemented may be mentioned those on the words each, eagre, Easter, Easterling, earnest, eddish, eel, either, elope, ember, embracer<sup>2</sup>, encrinus, engineer, enker, enlist, enough, entellus, enthusiasm, entice, entropy, epergne, ephah, epicure, era, ermine, errand, errant, essera, esurine, euonymus, euphroe, even sb., evening, ever, excise, extra. New etymological information has also been given in many of the articles on prefixes and suffixes, which are here extraordinarily numerous. Among the words of interesting history or sense-development are economy, ecstasy, edge, effluvium, electricity, element, elocution, embezzle, emperor, emphasis, enchant, engage, engine, English, entail, entertain, enthusiasm, entire, esquire, essence, establishment, estate, esteem, estrange, eternal, ether, euphuism, evangelical, evict, evidence, evident, evil, evolution, exact adj., excelsior, exception, exchange, exchequer, exclusive, execute, exercise, exhaust, exhibition, exorbitant, expedite, expense, expire, explain, explode, express, expression, exquisite, extend, exterminate, extenuate, extravagant, eye.

The treatment of the pronunciation has presented some special difficulties. An unusually large proportion of the words dealt with belong to the class that are much better known in their written than in their spoken form. The difficulties connected with the orthoepy of words of this kind have already been referred to by Dr. Murray in the Preface to Vol. I; but the words beginning with E are perplexing for a reason peculiar to themselves, the initial e in unaccented syllables being pronounced variously in the same word, not only by different speakers, but sometimes even by the same speaker. In words beginning with unstressed e before two (written) consonants, like effect, ellipse, entail, the initial sound is in rapid or familiar pronunciation almost universally (e); but in careful or syllabic pronunciation the majority of educated speakers would retain the older sound of (e), except before s. On this ground it has been thought best to use the symbol (e) in the notation of words like those above quoted, and (e) in that of words like essential, estate; but it should be understood that the sound expressed by the latter symbol is in colloquial use always a permissible substitute for an initial unstressed (e). Similar uncertainties exist with regard to the unstressed initial E before a single consonant: in most of the words in which this occurs the pronunciation varies between (e) and (e).

Before being taken in hand by the present editor, the material for the letter E had (in common with that for several other portions of the alphabet) been subedited in 1881-2 under Dr. Murray's direction by the late Mr. P. W. Jacob, who also revised it in 1884-5, incorporating the additional quotations accumulated in the meantime. Hearty acknowledgement is made of the important service thus rendered by Mr. Jacob; and it is a cause of regret that this accomplished scholar did not survive to see the publication of the first of those portions of the work to the preliminary arrangement of which he so zealously devoted the latest years of his life.

Although Dr. Murray is not responsible for any of the faults that may exist in this portion of the work, he has rendered much valuable assistance in its preparation; there are in fact few pages that have not been improved by the adoption of his suggestions. The proofs have been regularly read by Mr. Fitzedward Hall, D.C.L., who has furnished many hundreds of important quotations, carrying back the history of words to an earlier date, or exemplifying senses or constructions not sufficiently illustrated; also by Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, M.P., by the Rev. J. T. Fowler, M.A., of Durham, and by Mr. W. H. Stevenson, who have contributed many valuable annotations. Mr. John Mitchell, Dr. Murray's senior assistant, has also furnished useful remarks on the proofs.

On questions of Teutonic philology important help has been received from Prof. Eduard Sievers, Halle, and Prof. Napier, Oxford: on questions of Romanic philology the advice of Prof. Paul Meyer has been of great value. For information on various special subjects my thanks are due to the following: the Rev. J. C. Atkinson, D.C.L.; Mr. A. Beazeley, C.E.; the Rev. T. E. Bridgett; the Rev. W. Bright, D.D., Canon of Ch. Ch.; Dr. Robert Brown; Mr. A. H. Bullen, M.A.; Mr. Ingram Bywater, M.A., Oxford; Mr. J. S. Cotton, M.A., Editor of The Academy; Mr. P. A. Daniel; Mr. Léon Delbos; Mr. C. E. Rawson Gardiner; Dr. R. Garnett, British Museum; Mr. Israel Gollancz, M.A., Cambridge; Dr. Carl Horstmann; Mr. Henry Jenner, British Museum; Mr. Henry Jones ('Cavendish'); Mr. W. F. Kirby, Nat. Hist. Rieu, British Museum; Mr. J. S. Shedlock; the Rev. Prof. Skeat, Cambridge; Mr. John Slater, F.R.I.B.A.; Dr. Oskar Sommer; Mr. W. Barclay Squire, British Museum; Mr. W. Sykes, M.R.C.S., Mexborough; Miss Edith Thompson; Dr. R. F. Weymouth. I have regretfully to record that Dr. A. J. Ellis, F.R.S., Mr. James Lecky, and the Rev. Dr. R. F. Littledale, who furnished information or suggestions for some of the earlier articles, are no longer living to receive this acknowledgement of their valued help.

I desire also to express my thanks to the Trustees of the British Museum for granting me special facilities for working in the Library; to the officers of that institution for the readiness which they have shown on all occasions to assist my researches; and to Dr. F. J. Furnivall for constant and important help in many ways. To my assistants, Mr. G. F. H. Sykes, B.A., and Messrs. W. J. Lewis, W. J. Bryan, and H. J. Bayliss, working at Oxford, and Mr. E. Gunthorpe, working with me in the verification of references, etc., at the British Museum, I owe cordial acknowledgements for their zealous and painstaking co-operation. To these names must be added those of Mr. S. A. Strong, M.A., and Mr. F. S. Arnold, M.A., each of whom in succession was for a short period one of my Oxford assistants, but for reasons of health was compelled to withdraw from the work. Special recognition is also due to the valuable services rendered by Mr. A. Erlebach, B.A., in the revision of the proofs.

EMENDATIONS.

Each. The form euych should be deleted, with the quotation 1480-7 under (A.  $\epsilon$ ), in which this occurs, the correct reading being energich (see EVERY).

Egg-berry. (Egg sb. 7, p. 58.) This is a corrupt form of HAGBERRY, and ought not to have been given here.

Egromancy. The form egremauncey occurs a 1649 in Gregory's Chron. (Camd. Soc. 1876), 183.

Birant. This form and Errant (omitted in its alphabetical place) see variants of HAURIANT, q. v.

Enhandee. The word is, as stated in the text, a mistake for OF. enhandes; but the misreading occurs in Fr. writers, e.g. Palliot 1664.

Eve-star. The quotation 1691 under this word should be deleted. The word evester occurring there is adapted from the mod. Lat. enestrum, which seems to have been arbitrarily invented by Paracelsus, and is explained in the Onomasticon of Toxites (1574) to mean, amongst other things, 'the astral body [corpus sidereum] of man, which foretells to us either death or any other evil.'

Eylet-hole, sb. 1. The following earlier example has been found:—1497 Naval Accts. Hen. VII (1896) 334 Makyng of olyett-hooles with other necessaries for the seid sayles.

PREFACE TO VOLUME III.

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters D and E (the latter edited by Mr. H. Bradley). Including the Main words, to which separate articles are devoted (e.g. Day, Eye), the special combinations or compounds, explained and illustrated under the Main words (e.g. day-boy, eye-wash), and the Subordinate entries of distinct forms of words, entered in their alphabetical places with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated (e.g. Damacene, obs. f. DAMSON; Ee, Sc. form of EYE), the number of words amounts to 29,042. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning (such as day-beam, day-flier, eye-like, eye-syringe), of which lists are given under the Main words without further explanation, but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 2,750 more, raising the actual total of words included in the volume to 31,792.

These words are thus distributed between the two letters:

	Main Words.	Subordinate words.	Special combinations.	Obvious combinations.	Total.
$\mathbf{D}$	13,478	2,099	1,480	1,994	19,051
E	9,249	1,813	923	756	12,741

Considered as to their status in the language, the Main words are distinguished approximately into those native or fully naturalized, and still current, those now obsolete (marked †), and those considered as alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ||). The distribution of the Main words is as follows:

	Current.	Obsolete.	Alien.	Total.
D	10,033	3,046	399	13,478
E	6,521	2,409	319	9,249
	16,554	5,455	718	22,727

If to these be added the words in Volumes I and II, we have, for the contents of the first five letters of the alphabet, the following figures:

	Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special combinations.	Obvious combinations.	Total
A-E	66,254	13,181	10,156	8,017	97,608

That is to say, nearly a hundred thousand words, simple and compound, have already been dealt with in the Dictionary. Of the 66,254 Main words, 47,786 (72 ½ per cent.) are current and native or fully naturalized, 15,952 (24 per cent.) are obsolete, and 2,516 (3 ½ per cent.) alien or imperfectly naturalized 1.

For the sake of comparison with Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, and with some more recent lexicographical works, the following figures have been carefully compiled for the letter D.

	Johnson.	Cassell's Encyclopædic.	Century Dict.	Funk's 'Standard.'	Here.
Total words recorded in D	2,684	10,089	10,705	11,181	19,051
Words illustrated by quotations	2,136	5,251	4,977	1,313	16,128
Number of illustrative quotations	6,529	9,178	12,471	1,815	85,446

The number of quotations under D in Richardson's Dictionary, where the first serious effort was made to show the history of words by quotations, is 7,988.

Of this volume 740 pages are occupied by the letter D, 488 by E. The contents of the E part are treated of by Mr. Bradley in the Prefatory Note to that letter. Of the D part, the first 75 pages, to the end of DEA-, and the last 200, from DIT- to the end, exemplify fully the composite nature of the modern English vocabulary. Its two main bodies of words, from Teutonic and Romanic, are reinforced by a smaller body from Greek, and interspersed with words in varying numbers from most of the European, many of the Oriental, and some American and African languages. The same elements characterize pages 76 to 396 (DIB- to end of DIR-), where, however, there is a great preponderance of words formed with the Latin (and French) prefix DE-, Latin DI- and DIF- (forms of DIS-), and Greek DI- and DIA-. But pages 379-540 contain an almost solid block of words formed with the Latin prefix DIS-, extending to no fewer than 3,049 main words, and including many of the most important verbs in the language, with their cognate substantives and adjectives. We have only to turn to such words as defer, degrade, delay, depend, determine, detract, differ, discover, disease, dispose, -ition, distance, -ant, distract, distress, district, disturb, to appreciate the practical importance of this element. A strong contrast to this latinized group is afforded by the 66 pages of words in DR-, a combination foreign to Latin, in which therefore the words of Latin derivation are at a minimum, and either go back to Greek or Celtic (Dryad, Druid), or arise from later syncopation, as dress.

Among the more important words of Old English and Norse origin are the great verb Do, to the lexicographer one of the most formidable words in the language, which here occupies 16 columns, DRAW (17 columns), the verbs dare, deal, die, dight, dip, dive, drag, drink, drive, drop, dwell, dye; the substantives DOG (claiming, with its combination, 22 columns), daughter, death, die, door, down (sb., adv., prep., adj. and vb.), draught (and draft), duck, drone; the adjectives dark, dead, deaf, dear, deep, dry, dull, dumb. Among those of French extraction are the verbs defeat, deign, dine, doubt, dress; the substantives dame, damsel, danger, deacon, demesne, diamond, diaper, dinner, dosen, dragon, dragon, dungeon; the adjectives dainty, diligent, DOUBLE (with combinations, 13 columns), due. Among the words of Greek derivation are the medical terms in DIA- so curiously formed from Greek phrases; though now represented in current use only by Diachylon, they were formerly so numerous that their common element dia was itself taken as a word meaning 'medical preparation.' Interesting groups of dia- words are those connected with diaphanous and diathermanous; other important groups from Greek are those in Dynam-, and Dys-.

Among the words on which new etymological or historical light has been shed, or where the history of special senses has been for the first time worked out, are daffodil, damask, dapple, dean, DEBENTURE, Black DEATH, decoy, demijohn, dene-hole, dengue, DERRING-do, diaper, dicker, diet, dilettante, diocese, diphtheria, DISMAL, DISPATCH, dock, doddered, dolmen, Dom-daniel, dragoon; the military sense of detail, the academic sense of determine, -ation, the philosophical sense of dialectic, the ecclesiastical and political senses of dispense, dispensation, the logical sense of distribution, distributive. Other words of which the English history receives special treatment are dirge, Dane-geld, Dane-law, dauphin, deacon, deist, deity, defenestration, demarcation, demesne, despot, deuce, DEVIL, de-witt, diamond, DICTIONARY, die (dice), discount, distemper and its family, divan (dewan, douane), docket, Doctor's Commons, dodo, doldrum, DOLLAR, domesday, donkey, DUKE, dunce, Dunstable (way), DUTCH, dynamics, dynamo. Attention is called to the etymological articles on the verbs die and do; under DROP sb. there is a note showing the historical relations of the dreep, drip, droop, drop family of words.

The materials for the words from D to Dely were sub-edited for us by Mr. F. T. Elworthy of Wellington, Somerset, with the collaboration of members of his family; the following section, to the end of Dh, by Miss J. E. A. Brown of Further Barton, near Cirencester; a small section, from Dia to Dialysis, by the Rev. W. E. Smith then of Putney; and the remainder by our indefatigable worker, the late Mr. P. W. Jacob of Guildford, part of this having been previously arranged by Mr. J. W. Warre Tyndale of Evercreech. Much of the letter was subsequently revised, with addition of more recent materials, by the Rev. C. B. Mount, M.A. of 14 Norham Road, Oxford, and by Mr. John Dormer, then of Horsham; to the former of these we are also indebted for the detailed investigation of the history of several interesting words; and to the latter for the compilation of the Lists of Special Wants for D, as also for filling many gaps in our quotations for scientific and technical words.

In the 'proof' stage, continuous assistance has been rendered by Lord Aldenham (better known to friends of the Dictionary as Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs), the Rev. Canon Fowler, D.D. of Durham, the Rev.

J. B. Johnston, B.D., of Falkirk, Monsieur F. J. Amours, Glasgow, and, for later parts of D, by Miss Edith Thompson and Miss E. Perronet Thompson, Reigate, and Mr. Russell Martineau, M.A., formerly of the British Museum. But above all, we have to record the inestimable collaboration of Dr. Fitzedward Hall, whose voluntary labours have completed the literary and documentary history of numberless words, senses, and idioms, and whose contributions are to be found on every page; also the unflagging services of Dr. W. C. Minor, which have week by week supplied additional quotations for the words actually preparing for press 1.

Grateful acknowledgement is made of the generous help of all these contributors and collaborators; as, also, of the contributions of Professor Eduard Sievers of Leipzig to the etymological articles on Teutonic words, and of M. Paul Meyer, Member of the Institute of France, to the solution of difficult points in French etymology. Among others who have given help on particular etymological points, are M. Antoine Thomas of Paris, Dr. W. H. Muller of Leyden, Professor F. Kluge of Freiburg-im-Breisgau, Prof. A. S. Napier, M.A., Prof. Margoliouth, M.A., the Rev. Prof. Driver, D.D., and Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A., of Oxford. Many of the scholars and specialists named in the Preface to Vol. I. have also helped on particular points; special mention is due of Professor Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., Prof. F. W. Maitland, LL.D. of Cambridge, Prof. H. Goudy, D.C.L., LL.D., Prof. T. E. Holland, D.C.L., Oxford, the Rev. A. M. Fairbairn, D.D., the late Professor Wallace (of whose ever ready help with logical and philosophical terms a lamentable accident has so lately deprived us), Mr. H. T. Gerrans, M.A., L. Fletcher, Esq., M.A., F.R.S., and the Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew. We have also to acknowledge the substantial help of Prof. Albert Chester of Hamilton College, Clinton, New Jersey, with mineralogical terms; of Dr. W. Sykes, F.S.A., of Gosport, with the history of medical and pathological words (see diphtheria); of Mr. Barclay Head of the British Museum, with several numismatical words; of Mr. C. W. C. Oman, M.A., with the history of the word duke, and of Prof. Sylvanus P. Thompson, F.S.A., and Prof. R. B. Clifton, F.R.S., with that of Dynamo and Dynamic.

The assistants in the Scriptorium, who have been engaged on the work all through D, are Mr. C. G. Balk, Mr. A. T. Maling, M.A., and Mr. F. J. Sweatman, B.A. In the early part of the letter I had the cooperation also of the late Mr. John Mitchell and of Mr. W. Worrall, B.A. Mr. Mitchell had been on the staff of the Dictionary for more than eleven years; and his sudden and lamented death, caused by a fall when climbing in the Snowdon region, on August 30, 1894, was for certain departments of our work a loss which is not yet repaired. In the later parts of the letter, I have had the assistance of Mr. C. Talbut Onions, M.A., and Mr. A. R. Sewall; and, for certain portions, of Mr. A. Erlebach, B.A.

(di), the fourth letter of the Roman alphabet, Corresponding in position and power to the Phoenician and Hebrew Daleth, and Greek Delta, Δ, whence also its form was derived by rounding one angle of the triangular form. It represents the angle of the triangular form. It represents the sonant dental mute, or point-voice stop consonant, which in English is alveolar rather than dental. The plural has been written D's, Ds, de's.

The phonetic value of D in English is constant, except that in past participles the earlier full spelling ed is retained where the pronunciation after a breath-consonant is now t, as in looked, dipped, fished, passed. The spelling ed is now even extended to words in which OE. had t, as in wished, puffed, hissed, OE. wyscle, pyfe, cyste.

Dab (dæb), v.l In 4 dabben, 6 dabbe. Inflected dabbed, dabbing. [This and the accompanying sb. DAB l appear about 1300; there is nothing similar in OE.

Middle and early modern Dutch had a verb dabber, according to Oudemans, 'to pinch, knead, fumble, dabble': cf. Ger. tappen to grope, fumble (with the hands, as in the dark); but it is not clear that there is any connexion between this and the English word. Rather does the latter appear to be of independent onomatopecic origin, being, primarily, the expression of the mechanical action in question by analogous oral action, including (but only in a secondary way) the representation of the sound. Cf. Dub v., which in some of its senses appears to be of kindred formation.]

variant of Affolill, q.V. In mittal a has not been satisfactorily accounted for.

It has been variously suggested as due to childish or playful distortion, as in Ted for Edward, tante for aunt; to union of the article th' (cf. Corone, Affoodille, TW Affodill, and north. Eng. t'affadil); to final d of and, in (e.g.) 'fennell and affodil'; to union of the Dutch or Flemish article, as de affodil: the affodil; and to Fr. prep. d' as in fleur d'aphrodille. It is noteworthy that as in Eng. the word has gained a letter, in 16th c. Fr. it sometimes lost one: Littré (s. v. asphodile) quotes from De Serres (16th c.), 'Des racines d'afrodille', and also 'Decoction de lapace, de frodille'. A third form desfrodille is quite conceivable.

Affodill and its popular variants daffodil, daffadilly, were originally and properly the Asphodel; then by popular misconception, due apparently to the application to both plants, at their first introduction to England, of the fanciful name Laus tibi (see Turner Libellus B 3 b), it was applied, especially in the popular variations, to species of Narcissus, etc. Botanists, after resisting this misapplication, compromised the matter by retaining affodil for Narcissus. Finally affodil was 'rectified' to asfodyl and asphodel, and accepting the more popular adsfidil for Narcissus. Finally affodil was 'rectified' to asfodyl and asphodel, and daffodil restricted in oppular use to the Yellow Narcissus or Yellow Daffodil of Eng. fields and gardens.]

posed to have been originally brought from Damascus.

Apparently, originally the Rosa gallica var. damascena, a tall shrub with semi-double pink or light-red (rarely white) flowers, cultivated in the East for attar of roses; but this underwent many changes under cultivation in the West, and the name has been very variously applied by English authors. According to Miller (1968) the monthly rose, striped monthly, and York-and-Lancaster, were supposed to be varieties of the Damask rose. According to Flückiger and Hanbury, Pharmacographia, the name is now applied at Mitcham to a variety of R. gallica with very deep-coloured flowers.

provide funds for the protection of England from the Danes, and continued after the Norman Conquest as a land-tax.

The name is not known to occur in OE., and the actual contemporary notices, beginning with Domesday, are mainly of fiscal character. Bromton (14th c.) calls it' tallagium datum Danis', apparently identifying it with the gafol or tribute paid to the Danes in 991, and on two subsequent occasions, to buy them off. In the so-called 'Laws of Eadweard' (Schmid 496) it is described as an annual tax to hire mercenaries to resist and put down pirates. This might identify it with the keregyld' army-tax' levied by the Danish kings to maintain their army and navy (see O.E. Chron. 1939-40), and said to have been afterwards remitted by Edward the Confessor. Mr. Freeman suggests (Norm. Cong. II. App. Q) 'that Denageld was a popular name of dislike, originally applied to the payments made to buy off the Danes, and thence transferred to these other payments made to Danish and other mercenary troops, from the time of Thurkill onwards'. The Danegeld was levied as a land-tax by the Norman kings; it disappears under that name after 1163, but in fact continued under the name of tallage.

A name for the Dwarf Elder, Sambucus Ebulus. (The name is found in Turner 1538, but only the earlier name Wallwort or Wellewort, OE. weatwort, is given in Sinon. Barthol. of 14th c., and Alphita c 1450; Rous also, who died 1491, in relating the legend, has only the name Walwort; so that the names Danewort, Daneweed, Dane's blood, etc. can hardly have belonged to early tradition. While suggested in part by the abundance of the plant at certain spots historically or traditionally associated with slaughter, there was also an element of fanciful etymology in explaining the Latin name Ebulus from ebulier to bubble forth, with reference to the flowing of blood. See also Wallwort.

The mutual relations of these and the derivation and etymological development of the whole group are, from the want of data, still uncertain. The primary meaning of dappled was 'spotted, specked, blotched', which might arise either from a vb. 'to spot' or a sb.='spot, blotch'. A possible connexion is the Icel. depill arise either from a vb. 'to spot' or a sb. = 'spot, blotch'. A possible connexion is the Icel. depill (found in 13th c.) **Dapple-grey** (dæ'p'l<sub>1</sub>grē'), a. (sb.) Forms: 4-5 dapple-grey. [See DAPPLE sb., a., v. and GREY. Since dapple-grey occurs nearly two centuries before dapple itself is exemplified in any grammatical capacity (the only form known to be of equal age being the ppl. adj. dappled, it is difficult to conjecture whence or how the compound was formed. In such combinations, the first element is usually a sb.: e. g. in apple-grey, iron-grey, thy-line, snown-white, etc.; but it is difficult to attach any analogous meaning to 'spot-grey', if we suppose dapple here to be the sb. The Germanic languages generally have a combination meaning 'apple-grey' viz. ON. apalgrdr' 'dapple-grey, i. e. apple-grey, having the streaky colour of an apple (Vigfusson), Sw. apel-grad, Norw. apel-graa, Da. abildgraa, pied, piebald; OHG. aphelgra' glaucus' (Grimm), MHG. apielgra', Ger. applegraw' dapple-grey'. So F. pommeld (i. pomme apple) marked with roundish spots (of any colour), gris-pommeld grey dappled with darker spots, dapple-grey in Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 616; with which cf. Russ. HabJouthih yablochnyl dappled, i. yabloko apple; all said esp. of the coats of horses. It is not easy to believe that 'dapple-grey' which renders these words, has no connexion with 'apple-grey', their actual translation; the explanation may be that dapple-grey was a mixture of DAPLED spotted, taken as the sense-equivalent of F. pommelle, with apple-grey the formal representative of Norse apalegra', and its Teutonic equivalents. This would account at once for the difficulty in analysing dapple-in this combination, and for its presence here before its appearance as an independent word.]

The Gentl. Mag. (1735) V. 153 has under the title 'The joys of love never forgot: a song', a mediocre copy of verses, beginning 'Dear Chloe, while thus beyond measure, You treat me with doubt and disdain', and continuing in the third stanza 'Old Darby, with Joan by his side, You've often regarded with wonder: He's dropsical, she is sore-eyed, Yet they're never happy asunder'. This has usually been considered the source of the names, and various conjectures have been made, both as to the author, and as to the identity of 'Darby and Joan', but with no valid results. It is possible that the names go back to some earlier piece, and as Darby is not a common English surname, it may have originated in a real person. There is also a well-known 19th c. song of the name.

Dare (dees), 5h.2 [f. DARE v.2] A contrivance for 'daring' or fascinating larks.
1860 Sala Hogarth in Cormh. Mag. II. 239 note, The 'dare' I have seen resembles a cocked hat, or chapean bras, in form, and is studded with bits of looking-glass, not convex, but cut in facets inwards, like the theatrical ornament cast in zinc, and called a 'logie'. The setting is painted bright red, and the facets turn on pivots, and being set in motion by a string attached to the foot, the larks are sufficiently 'dared' and come quite over the fascinating toy.

Darn (dām), v. Forms: 7-8 dern, dearn, 7-darn; 9 Sc. dern. [Derivation unknown.

The verb appears about 1600, and becomes at once quite common: it may be that this particular way of repairing a hole or rent was then introduced. The form suggests relationship to Dern (later darn) secret, hidden, and its verb darn, darn to conceal, put out of sight; but satisfactory connecting links between the two have not yet been found. On the other hand the Celtic derivation suggested by Wedgwood is absolutely inadmissible. Welsh darn 'piece, fragment' has no association with darning or mending in any way, and the sense 'patch' given by Owen Pughe is correct only in the sense that a 'piece 'may be used to patch. The Welsh darnio hosan would mean 'to cut a stocking to pieces' with a knife; 'to darn a stocking' is creithic hosan. (D. Silvan Evans, and Prof. Rhys.)

Known first as the English name for the tolium of the Vulgate: see Cockle sb. 2. (6 dial. dahtorr, doffter, 6-7 dafter), 6- daughter (riming with after in Pilgr. Prog., etc.). Plural: see below. [A Com. Teutonic and Common Aryan word of relationship, OE. dohter (-ur, -er) = OF ris. dochter, OS. dohtar (MDu., Du., LG. dochter), OHG. tohter (MHG. tohter, Ger. tochter), ON. dotter (:-dohter), (Sw., Norw. dotter, Da. datter), Goth. dauhtar-, CoTeut.*dohter; corresp. to pre-Germanic *dhukter from original *dhughter, whence Skr. duhitar-, Zend duyðar, Armen. duštr, OSlav. dūštī, Lith. duktē: cf. also Gr. θυγάτηρ. Generally referred to the verbal root *dhugh., Skr. duh- to milk.

The normal modern repr. of OE. dohtor, ME. dojter, is doughter, still used in 16th c., and now represented by Sc. dochter, dowchter, north. Eng. dowter. The form daughter appeared in the 16th c. (substituted in Cranwer's ed of the Bible for Tindale's Daughter (do tai). Forms: a. I dohtor, -ur, sions, and always in Shakspere and later writers). It appears to be of southern origin, and analogous to the southern phonetic development of bought, sought, thought: a Wells will of 1531 has dahtorrs: cf. the mod. Somerset and Devon (dā'təi).

The form daughter appeared in the 16th c. (substituted in Cranmer's ed. of the Bible for Tindale's and Coverdale's doughter, whence in all later versions, and always in Shakspere and later writers).

In OE. the dative sing. was dehter; genitive dohtor (sometimes dehter); the uninflected genitive continued in use to the 16th c. The plural shows a variety of forms, viz. OE. dohtor, un. er (like the sing.) dohtru, dohtra, Northumb. dohter, dohtero; the first of these app. did not survive the OE. stage; the form in -u, -a, is represented in early ME. by Layamon's dohtere, dohtre; but Layamon has also dohtern, which survived in S.W. dialect to 1500. Ormin has dohktress, and the later text of Layamon dohtres, which is always found in northern ME., and became the standard form. An umlaut plural dester appears in the West Midland Alliterative Poems of 14th c. and the Troy-book of 1400; it occurs elsewhere with inflexional endings, dehtren, desteres: cf. brether, brethren. The unfixedness of the form is seen in this, that the earlier text of Layamon has both dohtere and dohtren, the later both dohtere and dohters; the MSS. of Chaucer also show both doughtres and donphren, Hail Meidenhad has dohtren and dehtren, the Alliterative Poems dester and desteres.

With the OE. plural forms, cf. OF is, dohtern and dohteren, OHG, tohter, tohterd, tohters, MHG., with umlaut, tihter, Ger. tochter, LG. dechter. The original Teutonic nom. pl. was dohtris, in early Norse runes dohtris, whence regularly Norse dettr, dettr; a corresponding OE. dehter, detter is not found, but the ME. West Midland dester may be its descendant. The other forms in the various languages are later, and analogical. For OE. dohter, dohtrn, -ra, see the similar forms under Brothers: it is possible that those in -rn, rn, orthern -ero, are assimilated to -os, -or stems like lombru, -ra, -ero. ME. dostren, destren exemplify the usual passage of vowel plurals in early southern ME. into the -ex type, and Ormin's dohtress the early ascendancy of -er plurals in the north and midlands.]

son of the King of France, from 1349 to 1830. Originally a title attached to certain seigneuries: Dauphin of the Viennois, Dauphin of Auvergne. According to Littré, the name Dauphin, borne by the lords of the Viennois, was a proper name Delphinus (the same word as the name of the fish), whence the province subject to them was called Dauphind. 6. The time occupied by the earth in one revolution on its axis, in which the same terrestrial meri-dian returns to the sun; the space of twenty-four hours, reckoned from a definite or given point.

6. The time occupied by the earth in one revolution on its axis, in which the same terrestrial meridian returns to the sun; the space of twenty-four hours, reckoned from a definite or given point. Const. during, in, formerly on, o, a, retained in twice a day, etc.: see A prep. 8, 8 b.

The volar or astronomical day is reckoned from noon to noon; and, as the length of this time varies (within narrow limits) according to the time of the year, its mean or average length is the mean solar day. The civil day in civilized countries generally is the period from mindight to mindight, similarly adjusted to its mean length. Ancient nations variously reckoned their day to begin at sunrise, at noon, or at sunset. The sidereal day is the time between the successive meridional transits of a star, or specifically of the first point of Aries, and is about four minutes shorter than the solar day. (The term natural day is sometimes used in this sense, sometimes in sense 1.)

Te-, prefix. The Latin adverb and preposition, used in combination with verbs, and their derivatives. A large number of verbs so formed lived on tives. A large number of verbs so formed lived on in French as popular words, or were taken over into that language in earlier or later times as learned words, and thence came into English, as decress-tre, decrease; defend-tre, defend-re, defind; desiderare, desire-r, desire. In later times English verbs, with their derivative adjec-tives and substantives, as also participial adjectives and substantives without any verbs, have been adapted directly from Latin, or formed from Latin elements, without the intervention of French. The following are the chief uses in Lat. and Eng.

I. As an etymological element. In the senses:
1. Down, down from, down to: as dependers to hang down, Depend (Dependent, -ence, etc.); depinite to lay down, Depone, Depose; deprimère to press down, Depress; descenders to climb down, Descend: devordre to gulp down, Devour. So of English formation, Debreak.

2. Off, away, aside: as dictinare to turn aside, Decline: dedicter to lead away, Deduce; defendere to ward off, Defender, to lead away, Deduce; defendere to ward off, Designare to carry off, Defender to ward off, Designare to to carry off, Defender to shall off, Designare. b. Away from oneself: as deligate to make over, Della. Gate; defender to the bottom, completely; hence thoroughly, on and on, away; also methodically, formally: as dictinare to shout away, Declam; deciderare to make quite clear. Declare; denidere to strip quite bare, Debuce; defender to weep as lost, Deplore; development to shoul away, Declam; development to shoul the decider to each of the decider to weep as lost, Deplore; development to make game of, Delude; derder to laugh to scorn, Delugices.

4. In a bad sense, so as to put down or subject to some indignity: as decidere to take in, Deceive; deliadire to make game of, Delude; derdere to laugh to scorn, Deside; delegated to abominate, Defender.

5. In late L., decompatities was used by the grammarians in the sense 'formed or derived from a compound (word)', passing later into that of 'compounded over again, doubly or further compounded'; in this sense the word has in modern times been taken into chemistry, botany, etc. (see Decomposity) as decembers, defender to dependent of the decider to disarm, decorder to grace, defector to disarm, decorder to grace, decorder to disarm, decorder to uncorler, disaderate unshold in late L., dis., Romanic des., became the favoured form; and although some L words in delived on, or were by scholars adopted into the Romanic langs., all new compounds were formed with dee: and many even of the Latin words in delivered, decorder, dec of the thing or character therein expressed, e.g. deacidify to undo or reverse the acidifying process, to take away the acid character, deprive (a thing) of its acid; hence de-acidified, -fying, -fication; de-anglicize to undo the anglicizing of, to divest of its English character, render no longer English. Some of these are formed by prefixing de- to the original verb, but others are more logically analysed as formed with de-+sb. or adj. + verbal suffix, the resulting form being the same in either case. In resulting form being the same in either case. In others, again, no corresponding simple verb is in use: e.g. decephalize, decerbrize, decolourize, defibrinate. The older and more important of these words are given in their places as main words: e.g. Dechristianize, Decompose, Demagnetize, Demoralize, etc. Of others of less importance, of recent use, and of obvious meaning, examples, nearly all of the 19th c. (but decanonize 1624, decordinalize 1624) here follow nearly all of the 19th c. (but decanonize 1624, decardinalize 1645), here follow.

(The hyphen is conveniently used when the decomes before a vowel, and sometimes elsewhere to emphasize the occasional nature of the combination, or draw special attention to its composition; otherwise it is not required.)

Dead, sb. 2 Also 3-6 ded, dede, 4- deid. The northern form of the word DEATH, formerly in regular use with Northern writers (dede), and still dialectal in Scotch (deid, pronounced did), esp. in certain locutions, e. g. tired to dead (deid), to be the dead (deid) of any one. Also in many combinations, as dead-bell, dead-candle, dead-rattle, dead-spoke, dead-thraw, etc. For examples of the simple word see the  $\beta$  forms under the various senses of DEATH sb; for the combinations see under the standard English forms DEATH-BELL, DEATH-THEOE, etc.

In some instances it is difficult to decide whether drad- in combination is the sb. = death, or the ordinary adj. And it is evident that later writers have often used phrases and combinations containing the sb., with the notion that it was the adj. Thus dead-bell could easily be understood as the bell of the dead, or rung for the dead, dead-sweat as the sweat characteristic of the dead.

1. A slice sawn from a log of timber (now always of fir or pine), and usually understood to be more than seven inches wide, and not more than three thick; a plank or board of pine or fir-wood.

1. In the timber trade, in Great Britain, a deal is understood to be o inches wide, not more than 3 inches thick, and at least 6 feet long. If shorter, it is a deal-end; if not more than 7 inches wide, it is a BATTEN. In N. America, the standard deal (to which other sizes are reduced in computation) is 12 feet long, 11 inches wide, and 23 inches thick. By carpenters, deal of half this thickness (14 inches) is called whole deal; of half the latter ($inch) stil deal.

The word was introduced with the importation of sawn boards from some Low German district, and, as these consisted usually of fir or pine, the word was from the first associated with these kinds of wood.

decan-um one set over ten (cf. Exod. xviii. 21 Vulg.), also Gr. δεκάνός, explained from δέκα, dec-em ten. Whether viewed as Gr. or L., the form of the word offers difficulties. In both languages, it had also an early astrological sense, 'the chief of ten parts, or of ten degrees, of a zodiacal sign': see Decan. Salmasius, De annis climactericis et antiqua Astrologia (Leyden, 1648), considers this the original sense, and holds it to be a term of oriental astrology, which was merely assimilated to δέκα, decem, in Gr. and L. As a military term, the Gr. derivative δεκανία occurs= L. decuria, in the Tactica of Ælian and of Arrian (both c. 120); the L. decanus occurs in Vegetius De Re Militari c. 386. The word is then used by Jerome c 400 in his translation of Exodus xviii. 21, 25, where the Old Latin had decurio; and about the same time the monastic use (sense 3 below) appears in Cod. Theodos. xvi. 5. 30, and Cassian's Instit. iv. 0. In later times of the empire it was applied to various civil functionaries. From these monastic and civil uses come all the modern senses of dean.]

anity; see CHRISTIANITY 4. (There were also urban deans (decani urbani): see Kennett Par. Antig. II. 339.)

The rural dean had, in England till the Reformation, and in France till the Revolution, large powers of visitation, administration, and jurisdiction, which are still retained in some Roman Catholic countries. In England the office and title became almost obsolete from the 16th c, but have, since 1835, been generally revived for purposes of diocesan organization. See Danser, Hora Decanica Rurales, 1835. (Kennett, Du Cange, etc., have cited decanus episcopi in this sense from the 'Laws of Edward the Confessor' xxvii; but episcopi is an interpolation not in the original text, the decanus spoken of being really in sense 2 above.)

Dean of Peculiars: one invested with the charge of a peculiar, i.e. a particular church, parish, or group of parishes which is exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese within which it is situated, e.g. the Dean of Battle in Sussex. Such is also the Dean of the Chapels Reyal in England (St. James's and Whitehall); in Scotland the Deans of the Chapel Reyal are six clergymen of the Ch. of Scotl., who receive a portion of the revenues formerly belonging to the Chapel Royal of Holyrood.

Dean of the Arches: the lay judge of the Court of Arches, who has peculiar jurisdiction over thirteen London parishes called a deanery, and exempt from the authority of the bishop of London.

to supervise the conduct and studies of the junior members and to maintain discipline among them, to present them for graduation, etc.

The office came originally from that of the monastic dean, and was disciplinary; one important function of the dean in early times was to preside at the disputations of the scholars, and in the Oxford colleges of the new foundation deans were appointed in the different faculties, e.g. at New College, two in Arts, one in Canon Law, one in Civil Law, and one in Theology, who presided at the disputations of the students in these faculties; from the end of the 16th c., it became customary also in most colleges for the dean to present for degrees. At present the functions pertaining to discipline, attendance at chapel, graduation, etc., are sometimes discharged by a single dean, alone or in conjunction with a sub-warden, vice-president, or other vice-gerent, sometimes distributed among two or three deans; hence the offices of senior and junior dean, or sub-dean, dean of arts, dean of divinity, dean of degrees, existing in some colleges.

C. Used interjectionally. Dear!, Oh dear!, C. Used interjectionally. Dear!. Oh dear!.

Dear, dear!, Dear me !: exclamations expressing surprise, astonishment, anxiety, distress, regret, sympathy, or other emotion. Dear bless, help, love, save us (you): ejaculations of astonishment, usually implying an appeal for higher help (obs. or diad.). Dear knows! goodness knows, Heaven or dial.). Dear kinows (I do not).

Knows (1 do not).

These uses with a verb suggest that dear represents or implies a fuller dear Lord! Thus dear knows! is exactly equivalent to the Lord or God knows!; cf. also the elliptical Save us! Help us! Keep us! and the like; but the historical evidence is not conclusive. (A derivation from It. dio, God, as conjectured by some, resting upon mod. † Dear, deere, a. 2 poetic. Obs. or arch. Forms: I dior, déor, 3-5 dere, 6-7 deere, deare, 7-dear. [OE. déor; not known in the cognate langs., and of uncertain etymology.

I dior, déor, 3-5 dere, 6-7 deere, deare, 7-dear. [OE. déor; not known in the cognate langs., and of uncertain etymology.

By some held to be intimately related to OE. déor animal (see Deer.). By others thought to contain the same radical form as Dear a., and to differ only in the stem-suffix (*dear-o-). In OE., from the levelling of o- stems and jostems, déor was formally distinguishable from déore only in the nom. sing. (of all genders), the acc. sing. neuter, and nom. acc. pl. neuter, which had déor, as against déore, déoru (o-). Hence, when the final « was lost or mute in ME., the two words became entirely identical in form. But in OE, their senses appear to have been quite distinct; and, in later times, the sense of dere, dear, from déor was highly incongruous with those developed from déore (though intermediate or connecting links of meaning also arose). This difference of sense is a serious objection to the view that the two words are merely different formations from the same base, as in the pairs strong strenge, vevord vierde, etc., where the two forms agree in sense. The ultimate etymology has been discussed by Karsten, Mod. Lang. Notes, 1892, 345.]

Common in OE. poetry, but found in no prose writing. In ME. poetry, not known in southern writers, but in the East-Midland Genesis & Exodus, the West Midland Allit. Poems, Gawain & Green Knight, Piers Plowman, and the metrical Destruction of Troy (all these except the first being alliterative); it then appears in Spenser (by whom it was perhaps revived), occurs frequently in Shakspere, in 17th c. poets, and archaically in Shelley. By these later writers it was probably conceived of only as a peculiar poetical sense of Dear a. 1, and there are uses in Shakspere evidently associated with both sense-groups.

Europe near the middle of the 14th c., and caused great mortality in England in 1348-9; sometimes also including the recurrences of the epidemic in 1360 and 1379.

The name 'black death' is modern, and was app. introduced into English history by Mrs. Penrose (Mrs. Markham) in 1823, and into medical literature by Babington's transl. of Hecker's Der Schwarze Tod in 1833. In earlier writers we find the pestitience, the plague, great pestitence, great death, or in distinction from later visitations the furste moreyn, the first pestitience; Latin chroniclers have pestit, pestitentia, epidemia, mortalitas. The distinctive magna mortalitas, great mortality or 'death', and its equivalents, prevailed in many languages: Ger. das grosse sterben, LGer. de grote dot, Flem. de grote doet, Da. den store doet or mandabit, Swed. (1402) store dobtin, later stordden, digerdden (thick or frequent mortality). Norweg. (14th c.) manydabit hims mibli; cf. It. mortalega grande, F. la grande peste, etc. The epithet 'black' is of uncertain origin, and not known to be contemporary anywhere. It is first found in Swedish and Danish toth c. chroniclers (swarta dodden, den sorte dodd). Hence, in German, Schlözer in 1773 used der schwarze Tod in reference to Iceland, and Sprengel in 1794 took it as a general appellation. From modern German the name has passed into Dutch (de swaarte dood) and English, and has influenced French (la peste moire). The quots. 1758 and 1780 below are translations from Danish and Swedish through German, and refer not to a later visitation in 1402-3, known at the time as plagam mibil (the great plague), but called by modern Icelandic historians, from 1716 c., svarti daubi (black death).

debaush, deboach, debauch riming in 1682 with approach: see the sb. See also DEBOISE.

F. debaucher is, according to Littré and Hatzfeld, derived from a sb. bauche, of which the precise sense and origin are according to the latter unknown; according to the former it = 'a place of work, workshop,' so that desbaucher would mean orig. 'to draw away from the workshop, from one's work or duty': so Diez. Cotgr. has bauche, 'course of stones or bricks in building', baucher 'to chip, hew, or square timber, etc.; also to ranke, order, array, lay euenly;' hence desbaucher might primarily mean 'to disorder, bring into disarray or disorder'. The sense 'drawaway from service or duty' appears however to be the earliest in French, though that of 'corrupt', had also been developed before the word was taken into English.]

In OF. the spelling was sometimes assimilated to Latin decepta, as decepte, whence in Eng. deceipte. But in both langs, the p was mute; the oldest Gower MSS. have deceipte, deceite, but the word rimes with streite (strait); the ordinary 17th c. pronunciation rimed it with -ail, as in Wither a 1667 bait: deceit; cf. the common 16th c. spellings in -sail, -sate, -ceat. The narrowing of $to i came later. In OF, the prefix dewas sometimes changed to des- (see De I. 6), which became very common in ME., and was here, moreover, in the general alteration of the French form des- back to the Latin dis-, subjected to the same change, so as to give, in 15-16th c, such odd spellings as dis-ceat, dis-stait, dis-sate (all meaning dis-t): cf. de quoi, duckquoy, 7-8 duckoy, duck-coy, duckooy. [Decoy, in all its senses (exc. 4 a) and combinations, was preceded by a simple form Coy sb.1 (known in 1621), a. Du. koos of the same mean-30.1 (known in 1021), a. Du. 2001 of the same meaning. Thus senses 1 and 3 are identical with 1 and 3 of Cox; sense 2 is a fig. use of 1; 4 b. and 5 are closely related to 3. The combinations decay-bird, -dog, -duck, -man, etc., were preceded generally by the forms coy-bird, -dog, -duck, -man, etc. It is thus evident that de-coy is a derivative, compound, or extension, of Cox sb.; but the origin of the deis undetermined.

It has been variously conjectured to be the prefix De-, the Dutch article in de kooi 'the coy' or 'decoy', the second half of Du. eende in eende-kooi 'duck-coy', and an obscuration of duck itself in duck-coy, which is indeed found in the 17th c., and (what is notable) not merely as the sb., but as the vb. (see below). Yet we do not find it as the earlier form, which suggests that it is really a later spelling of popular etymology. The likelihood that decoy is the Du. de kooi has been forcibly urged by C. Stoffel in Englische Studien X. (1887) 180. But direct evidence is wanting. And, since Decoy sc! appears to be an entirely distinct word, being much older in the language than either this word or coy itself, and was probably still in use when coy was introduced from Dutch, it is possible that the latter was made into de-coy under the influence of that earlier word. It is to be noted also that the sense 'sharper', 4 a below, actually appears earlier than any other, literal or figurative, and may possibly not be a sense of this word at all, but an independent and earlier cant or slang term; if so, it may also have influenced the change of coy to decoy.]

Decree is still used in Admiralty cases. In Divorce cases, a decree is an order of the Court declaring the nullity or dissolution of marriage, or the judicial separation of the parties. Decree visi: the order made by the court for divorce, which remains conditional for at least six months, after which, notest cause to the contrary is shown, it is made absolute. In Ecclesiastical cases, decree is a special form of citation of the party to the suit.

Decrees are said to be condemnator or absolutor according as the decision is in favour of the pursuer or the defender. A decree in absence is a decree pronounced against a defender who has not appeared and pleaded on the merits of the cause = 'Judgement by Default' in English Common Law. Decree of Registration is a decree factione juris of a court, interposed without the actual invervention of a judge, in virtue of the party's consent to a decree going out against him.
